THE TRANSFIGURATION

REFLECTIONS OF JOSEPH RATZINGER/POPE BENEDICT XVI

The great events of Jesus's life are inwardly connected with the Jewish festival calendar. They are, as it were, liturgical events in which the liturgy, with its remembrance and expectation, becomes reality – becomes life. The Synoptic Gospels create a link between Peter's confession and the account of Jesus's transfiguration by means of a reference to time. Matthew and Mark say: "And after six days Jesus took with him Peter and James, and John his brother." Luke writes: "Now about eight days after these sayings." Clearly this means that the two events, where Peter plays a prominent role, are interrelated. In both cases the appearance of his glory is connected with the passion motif. Jesus's divinity belongs with the cross and only when we put the two together do we recognize Jesus correctly. John expressed this intrinsic interconnectedness when he said that the cross is Jesus's "exaltation," that is accomplished in no other way than in the cross.

There is a connection with the calendar of Jewish festivals. Only five days separate two major Jewish feasts that occur in the fall. First there is the feast of Yom-Kipper the great feast of atonement; then the weeklong Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkoth) follows six days afterward. So Peter's confession on the great Day of Atonement should be interpreted theologically against the backdrop of this feast, on which, for the one time in the year, the high priest solemnly pronounced the name YHWH in the Temple's Holy of Holies. This context would give added depth to Peter's confession of Jesus as the son of the living God. The six or eight days would then designate the weeklong Feast of Tabernacles itself, as only five days separate two major Jewish feasts that occur in the fall.

The transfiguration story and the Feast of Tabernacles illustrates once again the fact that all Jewish feasts contain three dimensions. They originate from celebrations of nature religion and thus tell of creator and creation; they then become remembrances of God's actions in history; finally, they go on from there to become feasts of hope, which strain forward to meet the Lord who is coming, the Lord in whom God's saving action in history is fulfilled, thereby reconciling the whole of creation.
